

Metabolites account for most of the observed therapeutic effect of the cannabinoids. However, to date, limited research has been conducted in order to identify metabolites and to understand their biological activity and therapeutic effects.